Historically, in America, African American, Latinx, Native American, Asian American Pacific Islander, and Alaskan Native communities have had their stories mostly told by those from outside their communities, thus co-opting their history and experience, providing an inauthentic and incorrect narrative. The result is a shaping of the community's prospects and well-being by others. These last three years of COVID have shone a harsh spotlight making this painfully clear.

Join us on Tuesday, June 20, 2023, as we continue our webinar series, 'Changing the Paradigm: Who Tells Our Stories, Shapes Our Destiny.' This webinar will focus on the Native American community sharing how, though the process of communities reclaiming their history, they confront oppressively structures, promote and support healing and resilience, and by so doing, shape their destiny.
